Where the Millions of Creatures in Drinking Water Come From an 1 How They Should Be Disposed of

"I cannot understand the carelessness of copie." This remark was made by a leading New York chemist who was just making an analysis for the Board of Health.

"Take the subject of drinking water for instance. What sensible man or woman who ever held a glass of water up to the light felt that it was pure? Even a near sighted per-son can see that it is full of vegetable and an'mal matter. In the city, where water is allowed to accumilate in tanks on the top of the roofs, naturally the bottom of the tank becomes govered with black mud. In the country, wells are simply drainings from the surface water outhouses, often from barns and stables. Is it any wonder it is impure? Is it any wonder people get sick from drink-ing it? Some people boil the water and while ing it? Some people boil the water and while this may kill the live germs, it does not remove them nor them one the vegetable matter which may be in the water and which is often poisonous. The safest way to do is to mix a little pure whisky with the water and thus wholly counteract all evil effects which may be in any water, however impure. Doctors advise this and science confirms it. But, only the purest whisky should be used and Duffy's Pure Mait is admitted both by doctors and scientists to be the purest of all modern whiskies. Besides fortifying the system against disease, it also tones up, makes the singgish blood circulate and replaces weakness by strength."

Pres't of Board. Jtd:0tm Ingersoll's Modern Samaritans. I have heard and know of many nobler examples than that of the Good the New York Advertiser, A few years ago a vessel was disabled at sea and for days was at the mercy of wind and wave. Finally the provisions were exhausted, and at last the men cast lots for the purpose of seeing which one should be eaten. After the lot had fallen on one of the men, Captain Kreuger, who was in command of the vessel, said: "No; that man shall not die-he has a family and I have none, I will take his place," and drawing a revolver his pocket, about to put a bullet through his brain, when others interfered, and said: "Let us wait one more day," and the next morning a sail was seen on the horizon, and they were rescued. So there is another case, told of captain who had hoisted the signal of distress. This signal was answered and boats were being lowered from another vessel, but the sea was running so high that the captain of the first vessel ordered the signal of distress to be hauled down, saying: "We will take our chances; those who would rescue us could not live in this storm, A little while ago I heard the story o a Good Samaritan, and this story should be known, and when once known it will never be forgotten. I hardly feel at liberty to tell the name of this Good Samaritan, although I received the story from his lips. I will tell it without giving the name. I may get his consent, and if so will give his name hereafter. A few years ago-no matter wherein this country, though-a gentleman, a physician, driving two horses attached to a sleigh along a lonely road at night, partially benumbed with cold, was suddenly startled by a man who grasped his horses by the bridle and said: "Throw up your hands!" The doctor saw the gleam of the revolver, knew his danger, but instead of throwing up his hands, drew his own revolver as quickly as he could, but before he could fire, the robber fired and the bullet penetrated his left wrist. The doctor then fired and the bullet entered the side of the highwayman, who fell instantly to the earth. It took some time to get the horses quieted so that the doctor could look back to see what had become of the man. He was lying in the road. The doctor drove up to him, got out of the sleigh, and found him still alive. Thereupon he put him in his sleigh, took him o town, carried him to the hospital, had his own arm treated, and assisted in

For many weeks this man lingeredfor many weeks it was uncertain whether he would live or die-but at last hebecame convalescent, and was cured. He had no friends. The doctor gave him employment, and he remained in end of that time he said that he believed himself to be an honest man-that he was willing and eager to go out into the world and fight fairly the battle of life. And so, with the doctor's blessing, he went; and from that day to this he has lived the life of an industrious, honest man.

This is the noblest example that I snow of in the history of our country. My doctor is the "Good Samaritan" of America. The age of real chivalry has not passed. The world is nobler today

AN INSULT TO WOMAN.

Kate Field Roasts a Flippant Frenchman to a Turn.

I've come across a very extraordinary sentiment given forth by Jacques St. Cere in the Paris Figaro. Here it is: "There is a period in a woman's tife that belongs to love and to children. is only before or after this period that she is the equal of man, and the world will be saved when this theory shall have been adopted."

It takes a man, and a certain kind of Frenchman at that to coolly deliver himself of well-turned drivel regarding a sex which has been so long accustomed to look at itself through masculine eyes as to be almost incapable of an original

As a woman, I beg to inform M. St. Cere that every period of a woman's life should belong to love and to children. And, for the matter of that, so should every period of a man's life; for the man who does not love some one better than himself to the day of his death is a selfish animal that has failed to attain nobility of character, without which real manhood is impossible. Not to love children is not to be humane, and not to be humane is to disgrace humanity.

Of course I know what M. St Cere means. He has the impious insolence to infer that maternity is an inferior func-tion, and that only before and after the period of child-bearing is a woman the equal of man! Will M. St. Cere please state what is the greatest mission of the human race? Is it writing books, painting pictures, inventing machines, making money, or bringing forth immortal souls in stalwart bodies for the good of earth and the glory of God? Yet when engaged in this highest of all duties, woman is inferior to her husband who pa'ts, or writes, or invents, or sells sugar and tobacco, or drives fast horses to kill time

What ineffable bosh! With due deference to the stupendous conceit of a Boulevardier, the world would be lost, not saved, were such a theory as this Frenchman propounds to be adopted. When woman learns her great mission, self-respect will reach its highest level while bearing the responsibility of two souls. On that glad day it will be woman who demands of man that he shall stand upon her high plane and do his part in forming the disposisition and character of the coming generation. This pitiably ignorant Boulevardier little knows how much antenatal influences have to do with the evolution of good and evil. Half the wrong in the world, if not more, can be traced to the brutal treatment of mothers by their so-called protectors and superiors at the momentous time when a man's life should be dedicated "to love and to children." One would think that creation were as entirely dependent upon woman as in the days of the Virgin Mary, and that man as husband and father has no duties he is bound to respect. What colossal idiocy! M. St. Cere has only to consult an honest, earnest physician to be told that love in a household

Samaritan, says Robert G. Ingersoll in must be mutual to produce satisfactory The assumption that woman's intellect is dormant when woman's body is in the plentitude of its power, is as laughable s outrageous. Take all the women of distinction, and you will find that they have done their best work, as a rule, between the years of twenty-five and fortyfive. When did George Sand and George Eliot write their greatest novels? When did Mrs. Browning produce "Aurora Leigh?" When dld she conceive her exquisite "Sonnets from the Portuguese?" Did not Harriet Beecher Stowe rock a cradie as she planned "Uncle Tom's Cabin," which sowed the seed of a revolution that emancipated millions of slaves? But why waste further thought or space on a product of the cafes who has no more idea of the greatness of woman than he has of the littleness of some

Whatcom (Wash.) Reveille describes it as follows: It is a small cove or inlet. completely shut out from the observation of those who pass on the steamers plying the waters of the sound, and for many years it was unknown to any save the wary smuggler who plied his unlawful business between the ports of British Colum-bia and Bellingham bay. Hidden in the jungle away from the eyesight of the passerby, was built a commodious cabin in which those men would collect on their way to and from their various points of destination. Dan Harris, the founder of Fairhaven, when alive and a resident of the bay cities, could tell many interesting stories and weird tales of the meetings which had taken place at Smugglers' cove when chased by revenue cutters and officers of the law. Many tons of contraband goods had been collected here and hid away and kept for weeks and months waiting for an opportunity when the vigilance of the officers would relax and thus give them a chance to dispose of their wares. This was for many years a favorite resort of Smuggler Kelley, and many a boat has been unloaded here and hid away in this tocality among the rocks and cliffs adjoining, and suddenly made his appearance before his pursuers showing clean and guileless hands. The spot is a most romantic one and only valuable for its romance. Several streams of pure cold water find their way into the waters of Bellingham bay through the glades and jungles, which surround the cove, thus making it a most desirable spot for excursion and pienic parties, and of late years it is being much used for that purpose. Not far from here, farther to the north, is almost a counterpart in Deepwater bay, although not so thoroughly hidden from view. In this little bay comes tumbling down a precipice for a hundred feet or more quite a cataract, which was at one time used by the steamers which came to the bay as a watering place. The land at this point was taken up several years ago by an eccentric lady from St. Louis, who fell in love with the spot while on a tour of inspection of the beauties of Puget sound. Although the land is now unoc-

HALLER PROPRIETARY Co. Prince of Wales' Love Story. Two stories are related, on creditable authority, of the manner in which the heir apparent to the throne of England first heard of the charms of the prince of Denmark's daughter; and both of them form pretty incidents in the prologue of what is regarded as the most charming royal romance in modern times, says Lippincott's Magazine.

R. H. Albert Edward chanced, so it is said, to be whiling away part of a long summer afternoon with two or three congenial spirits, young men to his own to make even discussions on domestic questions possible, and the matrimonial outlook for one of the party was brought up. Colonel — drew from his pocket the photograph. as he supposed, of his fiancee to show it proudly to his companions. But insteady of Lady ——'s likeness there appeared a rather poorly taken carte do visite of the most charming girl the prince's eyes had eyer rested upon-a girl wearing a simple little white gown and loose white jacket, with a black velvet ribbon circling her throat, and her hair smoothed back from her brow, leaving the beautiful young face to be admired for itself alone. The eyes and lips seemed to be smiling at the prince. who gazed at the picture, demanding to know who in the world this lovely "country girl" might be. "The daughter of the prince of Denmark," was the answer, and naturally enough, the carte de visite changed owners. His royal highness showed it that evening to a confidential friend—one who knew of the matrimonial designs of the queen for the prince of Wales, a bride from one of the well known German houses having been selected. The quaint little photograph had not left the prince's keeping when a few days later he again, and quite by chance, encountered at the house of a certain duchess the same noble young face, this time exquisitely painted in miniature, the property of a lady who had just returned from Denmark. Use Haller's Sarsaparilla and Burdock, the "Old Hutch's" Son. They say that in his secret heart "Old Hutch" idolizes his thrifty and respected son Charles, although professing objections to his art and mission and ocial interests says the Detroit Free Press. It was soon after Charles was first established in business (so goes the Chicago story) that Isaac came to his father and said, "Dad, you ought to do something for me too." The old man looked him over; "You're right, Ike," said he. 'and when I come back from the farm I'll have thought it over and I'll tell you what I make up my mind to do for you. You come down to the board of trade at such and such a time." So Isaac presented himself to his parent at the appointed time, and said he, "Well, father, have you made up your mind what you're going to do for me?" "Yes, Ike,"—and there was a gleam in the eyes of the eyes of the parent-"yes Ike; I've made up my mind to get you a Waterburry watch."

Picture Three Miles Long. John Banvard died at Watertown, S D., of heart disease. He was seventy five years old, and as a painter of panoramic scenery he had few equals. Ho was born in New York. Fifteen years later he moved to Louisville. there he embarked on a flatboat for New Orleans, which place he reached after a trip full of hardship and adventure. Returning to Louisville he painted an enormous panorama of Mississippi river scenery, which covered strip of canvas three miles long. was a faithful transcript of 2,000 miles of scenery, and made a tremendous sen-sation both in this country and in Europe. Next he went to Africa, but finding nothing there returned to Asia, where he painted "Pictures and Poetry of Palestine." These two works were his masterpices.
